PFA People

From the CEO

There are few more dynamic industries than sport and few more dynamic parts of sport than Australian football.

Despite this inherent volatility, the PFA is proud to report that it continues to grow as a business and continues to deliver compounding outcomes for its membership.

During the past 12 months, the PFA has achieved a range of significant outcomes as a business and for its membership:

- Increasing fully financial membership to almost 700 players, a growth from under 200 players as recently as 4 years ago;
- Continuing to prudently manage the financial affairs of the business with a third consecutive year of surpluses and an increase to the overall savings of the PFA;
- Increasing the financial turnover of the PFA by over 50 per cent over the past three years through a combination of collective bargaining, commercial partnerships and increased membership;
- Ensuring that every Australian elite footballer is covered by a sophisticated collective bargaining agreement;
- Securing an extension to the collective bargaining agreements for the A-League and W-League which built on player entitlements and secured a genuine gender equality payment structure for W-League players;
- The establishment of the PFA's Footballers' Trust and an inaugural contribution of almost $200,000 from the players;
- Engaged with record numbers of players within the PFA's Player Development Program and provide a record number of Education Grants - an increase in 2019 of over 500 per cent on 2016 (the first year of the previous CBA); and
- Working toward a National Team CBA that should contain a world leading model for the employment of National Team players through a model of revenue share, gender equality in all areas and reinvestment in youth football in cooperation with the players. In essence, players investing in each other to help grow the game.

These outcomes could not be achieved without the commitment and engagement of you as players and the support of the high-quality staff we have at the PFA.

In addition, the PFA's advocacy continues to be world-leading, with a 100 per cent strike rate across all of its dispute resolution jurisdictions, recovering over $12million for players over the past three years.

In addition, campaigns such as those to “Save Hakeem” and pursue equality for women footballers have gained international recognition. Indeed, the work of the PFA – alongside so many other interested stakeholders – in securing the release and return to Australia of Hakeem Al-Araibi remains one of the players' greatest victories. With Hakeem now working for the PFA and Football Victoria as a Human Rights ambassador, the players are continuing to give Hakeem a platform for recovery and growth.

These outcomes could not be achieved without the commitment and engagement of you as players and the support of the high-quality staff we have at the PFA.

The players and staff will continue to compound their strength and influence as the game faces continued evolution, with key areas needing to be driven over the next 12 months:

- A long-term collective bargaining agreement for the A-League and W-League players within the new world of club owners controlling the league, with areas such as the salary cap and transfer system needing to be reformed;
- Ensuring that the League model under the owners continues to work in the best interest of the game as a whole and areas such as youth football and women's football do not become secondary considerations;
- Driving for the establishment of a professional national second division to help grow the sport's national footprint; and
- Leadership in the area of growing a genuine and immersive football culture in Australia, building on the findings of the PFA's report “Culture Amplifies Talent: A Framework for Building Golden Generations”, which demonstrates the power of culture in building internationally competitive footballers.

Whilst we are proud of the work we have done over the past 12 months in absolute partnership and integration with the membership, we know there are challenges for the sport and for the players ahead.

The PFA, however, has never been better equipped to face those challenges and continue to “support the players and build the game”.

Warm Regards,

John Didulica

Chief Executive

From the President

On behalf of the PFA Executive, thank you for reading the 2019 PFA Annual Report.

As each year comes to a close, I always like to reflect on the past 12 months. This report always provides the perfect opportunity to do just that and increasingly should give us all a huge amount of satisfaction when we consider what we have achieved together.

2019 has been a particularly impressive year from the PFA's perspective, as the organisation continues to support, advocate and represent players at new levels of dedication, passion and integrity.

It makes me incredibly proud to observe the increased level of engagement our players have with the PFA, the addition of diverse offerings and programs, the improved quality of those programs, the industry-leading research into players' careers and the willingness of players to come forward when they face challenges. The following pages display those impressive achievements and the PFA's day-to-day work tells that story.

Whether it is through legal representation, empowering players to make life-changing decisions in relation to finance and education or delivering vital wellbeing support, the PFA's constant mission to create excellent people on and off the pitch is self-evident.

From a personal perspective, a seminal moment which perfectly summarised the PFA's enterprise came in February this year. Victorian footballer Hakeem Al-Araibi was jailed in Thailand and threatened with extradition to his home country – a regime that had previously tortured him for the mere act of speaking out against human rights abuses.

Despite the extreme challenges and diplomatic sensitivities around Hakeem's plight, the PFA took a stand. It rallied players and the Australian football community, from grassroots through to its international connections, and drove a campaign headed by a former player, PFA Chair, CEO and PFA Champion, Craig Foster. The campaign pressured big institutions, the Australian government and FIFA and garnered international media attention, leading to Hakeem's eventual release.

We should all be incredibly proud of what we have achieved together and what we continue to build for the future generations of players.

That campaign perfectly encapsulated what the players and the PFA can achieve as a collective and deliver positive outcomes for players. Importantly, and in the spirit of the PFA's work, the support for players didn't stop there.

During the Women's World Cup in France, the PFA again was on the front-line championing players' rights. Taking a rational, evidence-based approach, the players and the PFA challenged FIFA's status quo in relation to gender pay disparity. In the board room, the PFA continues to put the interests of the players and the game first to ensure there are excellent outcomes during CBA negotiations.

Equally, I'm incredibly proud to be President of an organisation whose primary focus is to make us, the players, the best people we can be. It's an honour and a title and position I do not take lightly. The level of support the PFA provides through its Player Development Program is truly remarkable.

I challenge all of our players, delegates and executive members to continue to drive high levels of achievement through engagement with the PFA and, more importantly, for each other.

We should all be incredibly proud of what we have achieved together and what we continue to build for the future generations of players.

There are many individual and collective challenges that lay ahead for our players and the game. What remains a constant when it comes to finding solutions that benefit everyone is the voice of the players and the passion we have to achieve better outcomes for one another.

PLAYER REPRESENTATION

The PFA, through collective and industrial representation, has the ambition to ensure football becomes Australia's sporting career of choice and its safest and most universal sport for men and women. At the heart of the PFA's work are the players, who through representative positions on the Executive Committee, or as club delegates, help to advance and protect the players' interests, conditions and welfare and actively resolve issues on their behalf.

Player Engagement

Throughout 2018/19 players across both senior National Teams and the A-League and W-League undertook charity work and spoke publicly on issues of importance to them and their peers through the PFA and groups that are part of the PFA's network.

Rostyn Griffiths, Tarek Elrich and Nikolai Topor-Stanley demonstrated their support for Men's Health by sharing their personal stories through Movember.

Awer Mabil's initiative Barefoot to Boots was recognised with the Socceroo awarded the prestigious FIFPro Global Merit Award in 2018.

The PFA partnered with Football Empowerment for their 2019 African Cup and coordinated the team of the tournament to play a match against Melbourne City FC.

The Socceroos provided support to Awer Mabil and his family following the tragic passing of his sister Bor.

Players joined the campaign to #SaveHakeem.

The players established Footballers' Trust a major charity initiative to raise funds for important causes.

Jamie Young established the Jamie Young Cup in Nepal to help young disadvantaged youth.

Andy Brennan became Australian football's first openly gay male player.

Jamie Young and Tarek Elrich spoke out against racism.

For us to see the position we are in, we are grateful for that, but we are also in a position where we can give back to the community

UNDERSTANDING THE GAME

The PFA is committed to providing policy leadership and support to ensure Australia is the best governed football nation in the world, is internationally competitive on and off the field and is a central part of Australian culture.

The PFA's research and reports continue to entrench the organisation's position as thought leaders in Australian football and beyond, which gives the players a powerful and credible voice.

Research and Reports

In 2019, the PFA released a seminal research report on the 'Golden Generation' of Socceroos, and 'Stefan's Law'; a project the PFA hopes will lead to widespread preventative measures introduced around lightning events in Malaysia.

A POWERFUL ASSOCIATION

The PFA aims to deliver world-class standards of administration within a member based organisation by deeply engaging current and former players in the PFA's affairs and the wellbeing of the game, providing outstanding standards of service delivery and being at the cutting edge of the policy and strategy of football.

As part of our work in 2019, the PFA delivered a revamped two-day Player Development Camp, while holding a Player Agents Conference and hosting the 2019 FIFPro Congress in Sydney in November.

Events

Player Agents Conference

- ▼ The PFA held its third Player Agents Conference in April with 25 individuals from the player agency service, discussing player career paths, tax, troubleshooting overseas player contracts and A-League PCRs. The overriding objective was to cultivate a more holistic management of talent within the sport.

2019 PFA Player Development Camp

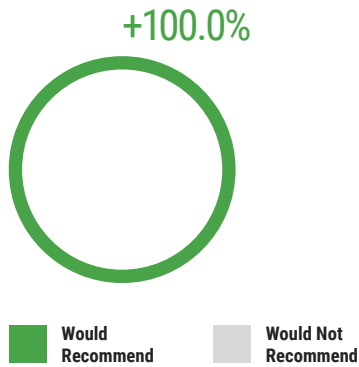

- ▼ The third edition of the PFA Player Development Camp was attended by over 160 current A-League and W-League players. The event program was significantly enhanced to ensure players at all stages of their professional journey were catered for. Held in Melbourne over two days, the objective of the Camp was to provide players with an opportunity to develop skills and build their knowledge base to excel on the pitch and thrive off it.

With content delivered by a range of industry experts, the structure of the event saw players in the first years of their professional careers undertake bespoke content aimed at equipping them to successfully navigate the world of professional football and the broader industry.

With over 180 Australian's based abroad, FIFPro has been integral in ensuring the rights of PFA members are respected both domestically and worldwide.

▼ LUCRF Super

LUCRF Super has been the major partner of the PFA since 2009. They play a key role in providing superannuation and financial education to PFA members. As a result of our partnership, hundreds of our members have joined LUCRF Super. Many have taken advantage of benefits that are open to all of our members, such as personalised financial advice and a secure mobile app. For more information go to: www.lucrf.com.au

▼ Victoria University

Victoria University (VU) is known for its industry-focused courses, flexible approach to education, and supportive and culturally diverse learning environment. VU's research and international reputation is also regarded as world-class. Ranked in the top 2% of universities globally (Times Higher Education World University Rankings), Victoria University is world-class in the west.
